

Case Study: Completing and Closing Out Commercial Construction Projects

Client: An Alaska Native Corporation

Project: Mid-Size Commercial Construction Project Completion

Challenge:

The Alaska Native Corporation faced challenges with several mid-size commercial construction projects that were poorly managed and incomplete. These stalled projects were draining resources and preventing the corporation from pursuing larger, more lucrative contracts.

Solution:

JW Industries Group (JWIG) assessed the status of each project, identified issues, and developed a strategy for efficient completion. We provided project management expertise, coordinated with subcontractors, and implemented best practices to ensure that each project was completed to the highest standards.

Outcome:

The successful completion and closeout of these projects provided time and resources, enabling the client to secure larger out-of-state contracts. This strategic shift resulted in a significant increase in revenue, amounting to millions of dollars.

Impact:

- Successful completion of stalled projects
- Freed up resources for larger contracts
- Revenue increase by millions of dollars

Conclusion:

JWIG's effective project management and completion efforts were instrumental in turning around poorly managed construction projects, enabling the Alaska Native Corporation to expand its operations and significantly boost its revenue.
